“ The University of Bradford achieved institution-wide Fairtrade status in December 2006 making more ethically sound food and drink choices available for its staff and students.

The University hopes that by achieving Fairtrade status, students and staff will become more aware of the inequalities of trade and the implications of their buying decisions. Fairtrade empowers people to challenge the ways that trade works: every member of a University can make socially responsible choices.

The activities during Fairtrade Fortnight offer the opportunity to find out more about Fairtrade and to question and discuss both the concept and the trademark. ”
