

Accessing journals through the library catalogue

1. From the library home page <http://www.brad.ac.uk/library/index.php> select 'journals' as your search type from the selection under the quick search box.
2. Type in the title of the journal containing the article that you want (NOT the title of the article).

Anatomy of a journal reference

3. The next screen shows an alphabetical list of titles matching your search term. Click on the title that you want.
4. The next screen shows details of the library's holdings of that journal.
5. To find print versions of the journal, check that we have the journal from the right year, make a note of the Classmark and then go to the shelves. Note that pre-1975 journals will be found on floor 02 (lowest floor of the library).

6. Electronic holdings will be listed in the Connect to box (note the date range which is available). Click on the hyperlink to access the journal.

NOTE This hyperlink does not appear on the catalogue-only terminals in the library.

7. Off-campus you will be asked for your ATHENS username and password. This was emailed to you when you registered, with the title 'Access to Library Resources'. If you have lost the original email, you can get a new password by going to <http://www.bradford.ac.uk/library/electinfo/athens.php>. Select the "Forgotten Athens Password" link then complete the information, enter your Athens username (which is your Bradford username with "bra" in front) and your Bradford email address.

Your Bradford email address must be entered with full stops between your initials, and must also be typed in as "@bradford.ac.uk". An email will then be sent to you from Athens asking you to reset your password.

If you experience difficulty contact your subject librarian for help.
